What is the fastest way to find the intersection of two unordered map? If there is no fast solution, how can I improve it? Currently, I am doing `map1.assign(a->b); map2.assign(b->c); map1.intersect(map2);` A: `boost::multi_index_container` will allow you to write code like this (with C++14/17 syntax): `boost::multi_index_container, int, const int&, std::less), BOOST_MULTI_INDEX_MEMBER(std::map, int, const int&, std::less), >, >` > I'm not saying this is necessarily the fastest implementation. But if you were designing this from scratch, it is the sort of implementation that you might choose. A: In C++11 and earlier you could go with something like this: `std::map m1, m2; //...populate m1 and m2... std::map::iterator i = m1.find(15); if (i != m1.end()) { i++; } // do it again for m2` This will be faster than doing the intersection test for every element. A: Consider using C++11's `std::map::insert/insert_or_assign/emplace` 3da54e8ca3
