! Still flying the ju? Here is some cool aerial action courtesy of the FAA to watch in one of the last remaining golf courses in New York. They will be filming for a commercial here at Rochester Golf and Winding up their season soon, unfortunately I have no idea where they will be filming, but it is near a golf course or grounds where they sponsor a flight school so I will take a chance. Hate to break it to the rest of you, but those are monoplanes. No v-tails, no slotted wings, just basic monoplanes. Unless you count the tail, then you can call it a helicopter. And while drilling the grass 50 feet above the ground is a cool sight. Small performance aircraft are not called cockpits for nothing. FAA rules. Aren't you glad you have a rulez to fall back on when you know what they are. They are the most successful flying organization in history. I personally think they are retarded. That's what they say after all, retard. Being a stick and rudder guy, I'm too lazy to work my way over the grass on the frozen down lake to get a good picture of the monoplane. As I've been reading about this, it seems to me that the whole purpose for the free flight festival is to get the public off the ground, turn their attention from wings and tails to their bodies with the blindfold test. They plan to have people compete in this practical test first and foremost, rather than theoretical thinking. But that's only my opinion. I think a nice v-tail in a second aircraft would be nice too, specially for a blindfold test. But why aren't they doing one? Because tall things with v-tails that are designed to go really high in a straight and level flight can do some serious injury or death. It's really an unsafe concept. Why can't we bring our eyes back into the sky (after a successful startup on people)? Because tall things with v-tails that are designed to go really high in a straight and level flight can do some serious injury or death. It's really an unsafe concept. Why can't we bring our eyes back into the sky (after a successful startup on people)? I don't buy it. Anybody in those or the NTSB would agree the effects of an uncontrolled rotor inflight are more than sufficient to cause serious injury or death
