"We're just treading water as our networks adapt to changing demands," Dr. Timothy Glenn, vice president for network service and delivery at Athenahealth, told Fast Company. "The change has been slow and I think we're in a period of uncertainty." Glenn says the current state of healthcare and the AT&T breach have prompted healthcare executives to be more cautious about who they do business with. "If you're a provider, we've got to become more or less like Amazon in the sense that we have to be very selective about how we source our vendors," he said. "Every supplier and vendor is a potential vector of attack." While Athenahealth offers a hosted service for organizations who want to use it, Glenn says he's heard from healthcare organizations that are looking to build their own alternative to their backup tapes. "They're looking at cloud storage, which is actually a better solution than traditional tape," he says. "The difference is that we don't have those realtime backup options, so if there's ever a failure, it's more challenging, especially if it's in the middle of the night." Glenn adds that although Athenahealth enables clinicians to access patient information quickly, they can't share that data with other healthcare providers. "It's not being portable at all," he said. "But we're using technology to give clinicians a way to access the medical record no matter where the patient is." Users of our hosted Athenahealth services can view clinical images and lab results for their patients from anywhere on any device. For large medical imaging organizations with hundreds of sites, Athenahealth provides an easy solution to a complex problem. For medical centers with hundreds of ERs, Athenahealth's visibility and reporting tools can enable a seamless transition between sites and allow full visibility of each visit, as well as many other advantages.Q: How to use variable in query string with htaccess I have the below URL www.example.com/index.php?q=search&field1=n%3C%25%3Aname%3C%2Fname%3E&field2=1.
